

Occupy the managing directors

sometimes
the best thing
to do
is to paint
your nails black
while watching
daytime tv.

there are certainly
people who would do less
damage
that way.

unfortunately
they're
awfully insecure
about their masculinity
and are unlikely
to do such things.

Christian Zorka

Selling out

remember the rock song
that shook
your teenage years

you danced alone
in your room; or
you went to concerts
with friends.

a loner or head of the gang,
it was yours

now you're thirty
and you turn on
the television set

and you hear the song
and think of your youth.

and you marvel at the
integrity of your heroes
who let the song
be re-written to sell
fun cheeze to kids

and you question
your own sense of direction
- the next decade
is yours.

Christian Zorka

Part six - This land is not your land

On not being beholden to random investors

if something
is being privatized

and i am not
the private who comes to own it

whereas before
i was part of the public
who owned it

then surely
i am being burglarized

Christian Zorka

This poem is SPONSORED by...

Part six - This land is not your land

Book shopping

you know things are wrong when
at the checkout
at barnes and nobles
you chose to pay cash
out of fear that someone somewhere
is tracking the books
you're buying
for they have the right to track that kind of thing and the bookstores
have to obey
or risk sanctions
and history tells us that when a law gives
rights to the government they're certain
to make use of them
you're checking out
and you dig out a $10 bill
and change
and pay
and walk out
knowing all the more

the price
of free s
a little r
to fight
knowing
they'll g
and tha
will com
and eve
expect

and the
will cra
and rev

Christi

This poem is

SPON$ORED

by...

Poems
in the face of
corporate power

With a
Free CD of 19 poems as
never seen or heard on TV!

Celebrating the 10th anniversary of corporatewatch